“In my opinion, many forest-related activities can generate profits without cutting down trees. It is about how to empower the surrounding community to get results from tapping trees and excellent agroforestry cooperation” he said.

He added that not only giving benefits for the surrounding community, but Gunung Walat University Forest is also considered to be suitable for student’s research with good facilities and service.

“This place is very good for conducting research. But the best part is the delicious meal with wood-based lodging facility. I would like to thank IPB and all the staff here. Hopefully, we can come again to bring my students to study here, thank you” he concluded.
